Built circa 1920s, this 2 1/2 story, wood frame, pyramidal family folk house has a central brick chimney and a hipped roof. The house is three bays wide with a side entrance and one-story front porch accented with modest Victorian scroll work detailing and brackets. The hip roof is broken at the center of the façade by a short-pitched front gable. An arched attic window sits directly under this gabled roof line and is part of a ring of small third-story rectangular windows that reflect the usable attic space inside. There is a two-story addition in the rear.
